smallish (West Bank) Palestinian factions Hamas and Fatah agreed in Beijing to merge and together the group will rule the West Bank and Gaza, in the latest attempt at resolving a long-standing rivalry and offering a potential scenario for the rule of Gaza after the war with Israel.

Previous similar declarations have failed, raising doubts about whether the Chinese-backed negotiations might lead to reconciliation between Hamas, which has ruled the Gaza Strip for 17 years, and Fatah, the main force in the US-backed Palestinian Authority in administrative parts of the occupied West Bank.

The two groups issued a joint statement announcing the deal, but gave no details on when the deal would be implemented, saying only that it would be done "by agreement between the factions." Both sides said the accord, which provided no guarantees, was only a first step, and they promised to follow up on previous reconciliation agreements signed in 2011 and 2022.

Israel swiftly denounced the pact, rejecting the announcement, Israel's foreign minister said no joint government between Hamas and Fatah can replace "bloc rule" and will be a crisis.
